even surfaces. Two carloads, or 20,000 gallons of oil, have been ordered and will soon be here. The oil has been purchased through an agreement of our enterprising business men, and the property owners or residents along the streets to be cilled will be assessed proportionally to cover the expense of oiling, as heretofore. Thirty thousand gallons of oil were used on the streets last year, but with the Austin machine it is estimated that the 20,000 will cover the same surface with better results than the 30,000 gallons did. Owing to the advanced price of oil, however, the 20,000 cost approximately the same that the 30,000 did last year, in the neighborhood of $1,000. But that is cheaper and much more satisfactory than sprinkling with water would be, for it saves wear and tear and preserves the streets. —Farmington Times.

I was 74 years of age May 2d and was well remembered by my children. On May 2, 1882, I celebrated my birthday at the battle of Chancellorsville, Virginia. Last Thursday evening I was sitting on the porch of my old friend, J. M. Morris, at Farmington. We were talking of that dreadful battle and agreed that there were more men killed in that battle than any other—at least, our regiment lost more men. We talked over the horrors of that civil war to which we both gave four of the best years of our life. But God has seen fit to spare us these long years. Mr. Morris is 78. He was a member of the famous Stonewall Brigade and carries a memento ball in his left shoulder as a reminder of the strife. May we be ready when the final roll is called, and cannon or musketry will be heard no more, is the prayer of Thos. P. Fitz, Co. I, 5th Va. Cavalry, U. S. A.

I was in Whitewater about two hours last Monday. The Methodist Conference was in session, but it was raining and I did not go to the church. More than fifty ministers and delegates in attendance.

I was at Marquand. The railroad has a very poor depot there. The day I was there there were shipped out more than 100 cases of eggs and forty coops of chickens.

The wheat is improving, but nothing like as good as last year.

I was in the Lead Belt last Friday. It was payday and everybody had money.

I was at Annapolis Saturday. Chas. E. Bolch certainly has a convenient store building. His office is in the back of the store and very quiet and nice. Add Reese, a candidate for judge, is doing a fine business. They ran an up-to-date hotel.

I was at Benton, in Scott county, Wednesday. They've had five court houses; the one just finished is the finest in the state; it cost $125,000. While there I met my friend, Wm. H. Lewis, formerly editor of the Piedmont Banner. He now owns the Scott County Democrat.

I met Mrs. Amanda Semande, nee Bowles, from Poplar Bluff. She was on her way to visit her daughter at Illinois.

Annapolis is going to have electric lights. H. P. White has installed a dynamo at his water mill.

Sorry to hear of Bob Dunn's death. Another Confederate gone.

I find in my travels throughout the Southeast that Fred Gardner is far ahead of the other candidates for Governor. Atkinson seems to be running second. I see Robb is in the field against Hensley and Munger. This will help Munger.

Horace Morris from Kensett, Ark., was here Monday to visit relatives.

John Howard spent Sunday in St. Louis with his brother, who is in the hospital. Glad to know he is improving.

H. H. Hughes was in Ironton Saturday.
